

Falaq Kagda. Festivals of the World: Kenya. Milwaukee: Gareth Stevens, 1997. 32 pp. $18.60, cloth, ISBN 978-0-8368-1685-3.

Reviewed by Brenda F. Randolph

Published on H-AfrTeach (January, 1998)

This work is part of a series that introduces young readers to festivals and cultures in various parts of the world. At the outset of this book on Kenya, a number of Kenyan celebrations are described in a line or two. Some are treated in greater depth later in the text and a number are mentioned with no further explanation. Most of the text describes rural rites of passage ceremonies that few American children have experienced. Parallel events or celebrations that Western children could understand more readily are given short shrift.

An inordinate amount of the text focuses on the cattle-keeping Maasai, a tiny minority group in Kenya that only numbers about 250,000. They appear in over eighteen photographs while the Kikuyu who number over 4.5 million are featured in only a handful. The author uses stereotypical or inaccurate terms such as "tribe," "hut", and "fierce" and errs when stating that there is an African language called "Bantu" (the term Bantu refers to a language family not a specific language). Students are not likely to gain a balanced or well-informed picture of Kenyan festivals from this book.

Copyright (c) 1998 by H-Net, all rights reserved. This work may be copied for non-profit educational use if proper credit is given to the author and the list. For other permission, please contact <H-Net@h-net.msu.edu>.

If there is additional discussion of this review, you may access it through the network, at <https://networks.h-net.org/h-afrteach>

Citation: Brenda F. Randolph. Review of Kagda, Falaq. Festivals of the World: Kenya. H-AfrTeach, H-Net Reviews. January, 1998.

URL: <https://www.h-net.org/reviews/showrev.php?id=1648>

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Noncommercial-No Derivative Works 3.0 United States License.